

WHAT WILL YOUR LEGACY BE?

A GUIDED CONVERSATION

WELCOME

Core Purpose & Mission

TriBEs are about small groups of people that are learning together through the pursuit of Jewish wisdom; praying together and developing personal spiritual practices and inspiring worship that uplifts the soul and connects to God; Acting together through ongoing significant acts of loving kindness and world repair; Playing together in fun social settings where people can relax, laugh, and be ourselves; Caring for each other by valuing and supporting one another in times of joy and sorrow; and are Accountable to each other through shared leadership that serves the best interests of the individual and community.

Blessing

As we gather in our TriBE, may we honor the values of our Jewish tradition. May we bring compassion, insight, and wisdom to our presence with each other through learning and dialogue. May we recognize the Divine Image in one another, and let that awareness be reflected in our words and actions.

Baruch atah Adonai, Eloheinu Melech Ha'olam, asher kidshanu b'mitzvotav, v'tzi-vanu la'asok b'tzorkhay tzibur.

Blessed are You, Adonai our God, Source of All, who has made us holy with your mitzvot and instructed us to engage deeply with our community.

Brit

Before we begin, let's review the brit (covenant) that enriches our time together.

ASK & SHARE

Let's take a moment to introduce ourselves. Please share your name and what comes to mind when you hear the word, "legacy."

You can use the space below to make some notes to yourself.

LEARN

A dictionary definition of legacy generally refers to something transmitted from an ancestor or predecessor—something that we have received from those who have come before us. But as we go about the business of crafting our lives today, we can ask ourselves what we want our own legacy to be—what do we want to bring forth into the future? What do we want to have left behind? What kind of impact do we want to have had? What kind of person do we want to have been? How do we want to have touched people? How do we want to be remembered?

“When we begin to think about legacy,” Linda Thal writes, “we notice that the story of our lives extends backward before we were born... just as it will continue forward beyond our lifetime. Our legacies include what we have inherited from the past and how that has influenced the shape of our lives. Accordingly, we need to look in both directions. We ask, what have we done with that inheritance, and in what ways does our life ripple outward from it, beyond ourselves.”

Consider the following poem, by Billy Collins:

Fall to Your Knees and Thank God for Your Eyesight

Was my mother's usual response to my bouts of childhood whining.

I can't find my other sneaker
Fall to your knees and thank God for your eyesight
There's no one to play with this early.
Fall to your knees and thank God for your eyesight.
My bicycle only has three gears.
Fall to your knees and thank God for your eyesight . . .

Needless to say, I never fell for it,
though it did create pauses in my trickle of complaints
and maybe cleared some room in my room strewn with toys...
a little space to think about God and eyesight
but not for long, of course, the demands of childhood being what they are. And the repeated words sometimes made me think twice before whimpering about a bruise on my knee, or foolishly I would say the line just when she did,

the two of us chanting Fall to your knees...
which is as far as I got before she appeared in the doorway and pinned me to the floor with that look.

No surprise to know that nowadays
I say it every chance I get:
to everyone under this roof including the dog
and under my breath to people on the street –
this one grouching about the price of eggs or gasoline that one furious that the bus is late, especially when I realize those voice are mine –

me peevish in the bedroom, me bitching about the rain,
me and my broken shoelace, me in the sand trap,
me forgetting to fall to my knees to thank her for giving me the eyes to see the world, to regard these words.

As we reflect on this text, here are a few questions to consider:

Interpretive Questions

- What was the author’s reaction to the words “Fall to your knees and thank God for your eyesight” when he was a child?
- How did his relationship to these words change as he grew older?
- How does this poem relate to the idea of “legacy”?

Reflective Questions

- Do you find yourself speaking in the voices of those who shaped your upbringing? What words of theirs do you carry with you?
- If there were a catch-phrase that would embody the legacy you wish to leave behind, what would it be?

Use the space below to write some notes to yourself.

PERSPECTIVES FROM JEWISH TRADITION

Consider this text, from the Babylonian Talmud:

One day, [a man named Honi the Circle-Maker] was walking along the road when he saw a certain man planting a carob tree. Honi said to him: This tree, after how many years will it bear fruit? The man said to him: It will not produce fruit until seventy years have passed. Honi said to him: Is it obvious to you that you will live seventy years, that you expect to benefit from this tree? He said to him: That man himself found a world full of carob trees. Just as my ancestors planted for me, I too am planting for my descendants. Honi sat and ate bread. Sleep overcame him and he slept. A cliff formed around him, and he disappeared from sight and slept for seventy years. When he awoke, he saw a certain man gathering carobs from that tree. Honi said to him: Are you the one who planted this tree? The man said to him: I am his son's son. Honi said to him: I can learn from this that I have slept for seventy years . . . Honi went home and said to the members of the household: Is the son of Honi the Circle-Maker alive? They said to him: His son is no longer with us, but his son's son is alive. He said to them: I am Honi the Circle-Maker. They did not believe him. He went to the study hall, where he heard the Sages say about one scholar: His [interpretations of Jewish law] are as enlightening and as clear as in the years of Honi the Circle-Maker, for when Honi the Circle-Maker would enter the study hall he would resolve for the Sages any difficulty they had. Honi said to them: I am he, but they did not believe him and did not pay him proper respect. Honi became very upset, prayed for mercy, and died.

Discussion Questions:

- What does Honi learn about his legacy?
- Does our legacy depend on whether or not we have children?
- It appears that 70 years after this death, Honi is still remembered as a great scholar. Why, then, does he become so upset? Is that legacy not enough?
- The text suggests that just as we inherited the world from those who came before, we must plan ahead for coming generations. What have you inherited that you would like to pass on?
- The text suggests that we may not live to see the fruits of our labors. What effect does this have on the actions we decide to take in our lifetime?

DO

As we conclude the conversation, here are a few final questions to consider.

- What's one insight that you've gained from this conversation?
- What is one thing you want to change in your life before we meet next time?
- What's one obstacle to you making that change, and how can you overcome it? Who might you need help from in order to make this change?
- What could we do together as a community based on what we talked about today?

Use the space below to note your response to these questions.

Thank you for being part of this conversation.

Portions of this guide were originally developed by Rabbi Nicole Auerbach for Central Synagogue.

The Union for Reform Judaism leads the largest and most diverse Jewish movement in North America. We strengthen communities that connect people to Jewish life. Visit <https://urj.org/> for more information.

Ask Big Questions was developed, launched, and scaled by Hillel International: The Foundation for Jewish Campus Life. Ask Big Questions is a national initiative to help people deepen understanding, strengthen community, and build trust through reflective conversation. Visit AskBigQuestions.org to learn more.

©2017 Hillel International. All rights reserved.

Ask Big Questions® is a registered trademark of Hillel International.